Steel Cars Credited With
Saving Lives of 100
Or More

(By Associated Press)
DEFIANCE, Dec. 10.—Eighty passengers and 20 crew members were injured or shaken up early today when the 10-car Fort Pitt Baltimore & Ohio passenger train was derailed near Holgate.

Apparently only three of the passengers, most of whom tumbled from their Pullman berths as the passenger cars overturned, required hospital treatment.

Scores Treated at Scene
Physicians from Defiance, Napoleon and Holgate, however, said they treated scores of persons for minor cuts and bruises at the wreck scene, eight miles east of here.

Those treated in the hospital were Mrs. James Knowell, 40, of St. Paul, Minn.; Mrs. Michael Shaughnessy of Willard, O.; and Mrs. Helen Rowland, 42, of Chicago. Mrs. Rowland was released a few hours later.

Mrs. Knowell and Mrs. Shaughnessy suffered severe cuts. The latter, like many other women passengers, had to be liberated from one of the overturned cars through a shattered window.

Estimates of the number of passengers on the limited eastbound train varied from 100 to 125. Physicians said all of them were pretty badly shaken up.

The wreck occurred at 3:20 a. m. Trainmen expressed belief that the reason behind the second of two locomotives pulling the fast train was derailed, causing the cars behind it to leave the rails.

Saved By Steel Cars
Mrs. Shaughnessy's husband, a retired railroad worker, said that many persons probably would have been killed except for the fact that all the cars were of steel construction.

"None of the cars shattered like they would have if they had been wood," Shaughnessy declared.

"It was the worst wreck I've ever seen. There was lots of confusion."

Railroad Is Named
In Damage Action

LISBON, Dec. 10.—The Pennsylvania Railroad was named defendant in a $25,000 damage suit filed Friday by William Frankland of East Palestine, administrator of Joseph K. Mankin's estate.

Mankin was fatally injured Oct. 8, 1937, when a truck he was driving on the Darlington-New Galilee road was struck by a train. The plaintiff charges the railroad with negligence in failing to provide proper warning devices at the crossing.

According to the plaintiff the train was traveling at the rate of 75 miles an hour when it struck the truck. The machine was carried 1,500 feet before the engineer was able to stop the train. The plaintiff asserts the engineer did not sound his whistle while approaching the crossing.

Mankin died in a Beaver Falls hospital two hours after the accident.

Past Week Sets Record In Retail Sales Volume
For Year

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—America's dollar-laden army of Christmas shoppers mobilized and swooped down this past week on the nation's stores and shops, and the net result was the biggest volume of retail sales for any week this year.

Dollar totals lagged a shade under last year at this time, but the buying was expansive enough to satisfy most merchants.

Wholesale houses reported increased merchandise reorderings. Wholesale gains were reflected in railway freight loadings for the latest week.

Industrial Front Active

Industrial activity continued at a brisk pace. Steel mill operations for the week were off 8 of a point to 59.9 per cent of capacity. However, officials predicted output would hover around 60 per cent for at least another month or so. The mills were busiest making automotive sheets and strip, although orders for metal for building construction were on the rise.

Automobile production topped the 100,000-car mark the past week for the first time in 16 months. Output aggregated 109,705 cars.

Electric output at 2,285,523,000 kilowatt hours in the latest week set a new 1938 high.

Stocks, Bonds Easier

Stocks and bonds were easier the past week. Dealings were light, and downward tendencies were attributed to continued political unrest and year-end selling of securities to establish gains or losses for income tax purposes.

The European troubles gave some strength to wheat and corn at Chicago. Industrial commodities, such as non-ferrous metals and hides, however, tended lower on the week in futures dealings, indicating big industrial companies currently were making no great effort to build up depleted stocks of raw materials.

Light Of Knowledge Burns
Brightly, Far Into the Night

High School Building Now Used Almost As Much At Night As It Is During Day

In contrast with the days gone past when schools closed in mid-afternoon and remain darkened until the following morning, the light of knowledge burns brightly—and long—at Salem High school these days.

The high school building, whose hallways echo to the footsteps of youthful pupils as well as post-graduate students and even the more learned, is the center of activity on more than one night in the week.

The illuminated structure is self-explanatory of its night activity. Lights glow from hall and classroom windows and two lights at the entrance of the building stand as beckoning signals for passersby. Facilities of the building have been extended to different groups in the city, for study periods, etc., by the board of education, and most any night from Monday through Thursday, the building is in use. Friday nights are left open, primarily for basketball games.

Held Kent Classes
The Kent university extension classes for school teachers of the Salem district are held each Tuesday afternoon and evening. The groups, tutored by Lamar Stephan, of the Kent university staff, are studying the geography of Europe, probably an interesting subject today.

Also convening on Tuesdays at the high school are approximately 25 members of the American Institute of Banking class, who are studying economics. George Emery is the instructor. Officials and employees of local banks and a few neighboring institutions are enrolled.

An evening school in drama—a community project—is conducted by M. A. Cox. Porter Aiken of Franklin Square, who coached dramatics in a WPA class last winter, has joined E. J. Kunkel of Leetonia this year in teaching an Americanization class, sponsored by the federal emergency schools.

Seven different sections of the Salem Trades class make use of the high school building for their studies and experimental programs, guided by E. L. Heusch, supervisor of trades and industries, and Holland Cameron, trades class coordinator.

Study For Future
Young men in this group study drawing, science, mathematics, metalurgy, etc. The classes are sponsored by the state department of vocational education and the local school board.

Prosecutor Karl T. Stouffer
Puts Investigators

FINDS MACHINES,

Receives Complaints On Punch Boards From Salem People

LISBON, Dec. 10.—Columbiana County Prosecutor Karl T. Stouffer disclosed today that he has placed two secret investigators at work to gather information for a probe of gambling activities which will be taken up by the grand jury when it convenes Monday, Jan. 9.

The prosecutor, who already this year has collected $8,900 in gambling fines, gleaned from the pockets of offenders, said he had found slot machines in the eastern area of Knox township and only within the past week had learned of other places where the law was being broken.

"The resumption of the vice probe, Stouffer said, is necessitated because 'I thought all the gambling devices had been taken in, but apparently they are out again.'

"In the first place it's contrary to law. If local authorities want to cope with the situation it will relieve me of a lot of trouble. Apparently, they are not, so we will have to act again and clean up things."

"Right now we're going to center our activities on gambling equipment—slot machines, punch boards, etc. Later we'll go at the numbers racket again."

The prosecutor said that a slot machine syndicate is working out of Salem and that gambling devices are prevalent in Salem as well as Leetonia. He said he knew also of places along Route 14, between Columbiana and East Palestine, and on Route 7 toward East Liverpool, where gambling is being permitted.

Stouffer said he had received complaints and reports of punch board displays in Salem.

He urged "pupils spirited and patriotic citizens who are interested in law enforcement" to cooperate in the drive against gambling.

Indian Goes On War-Path; Jailed

MEDINA, Dec. 10.—Chief Greyhound, 47, Cherokee Indian medicine man, tenanted a jail cell today while authorities considered what action to take concerning his brief but active warpath march of yesterday.

The Indian, of towering size, ran amuck with a pistol in each hand, firing upon sheriff's deputies who were summoned by WPA workers, threatened by the chief as they toiled on a Medina county fairgrounds project. Greyhound fired one bullet in the direction of his wife, seated in an automobile, the windshield of which was shattered.

Confess Holdups At Columbiana and Sebring

Seized several hours after they abducted State Highway Patrol Corporal Parker W. Powell, 29, near Lebanon, and dumped him, handcuffed, out of his own car, two men confessed to the $7,000 Citizens bank holdup at Columbiana a year ago and the $2,700 holdup at a Sebring loan office Thursday. They are also linked with a series of auto thefts and other crimes from Pennsylvania to Nebraska. They are David Cross of Hamilton, Pa., right, and Coy Russell of Houston, Texas, center, below. With them were arrested two women, Marie Day, of Greenup, Ky., center, who is hiding her face, and, left, Norma Hayes of Ashland, Ky., who doesn't seem to regard the matter in a serious vein.

Pair Held In Lebanon On Charges of Robbery and Kidnaping

(By Associated Press)

LEBANON, Dec. 10.—Federal Bureau of Investigation agents were expected here today to put two ex-convicts and their woman companions through an intensive grilling about a $2,700 bank robbery in Sebring which was a prelude to the kidnaping of a state highway patrolman and a wild manhunt in southwestern Ohio Thursday night.

Held for Grand Jury

The quartet, closely guarded and under heavy bond, was held for grand jury action Jan. 3 on charges of armed robbery and kidnaping while the FBI announced that detainees would be filed against the two men, David I. Cross, 29, of Hamilton, Pa., and Coy Russell, 29, alias A. D. Mitchell, of Houston, Tex., in connection with the Sebring robbery. The government issued a detainer eight months ago against Cross in connection with the shooting of a Pennsylvania state policeman.

The men, with Marie Day, 25, of Greenup, Ky., and Naomi Hayes, alias Hatfield, 25, of Ashland, Ky., were arraigned late yesterday, less than 24 hours after Corp. Parker W. Powell, 29, of the Wilmington patrol station, was forced into his car near Waynesville and dumped out, manacled with his own handcuffs, 10 miles away.

Cross and Russell, who was arraigned under his alias of Mitchell, were held under $25,000 bond each when they pleaded guilty. The women waived examination and were held under $15,000 each.

Confess Series of Crimes

Prosecutor C. Donald Dilatash said the men confessed Powell's abduction, the Sebring robbery, a $7,000 Columbiana county bank holdup last December, an $800 Fairfield, Neb., bank robbery, several liquor store holdups near Pittsburgh, Pa., and one in Kent, O., and numerous auto thefts.

Col. Lynn Black, superintendent of the patrol, who said Russell admitted escaping from the Huntsville, Tex., state prison, reported that the men led a trail of violence from North Dakota to Pennsylvania. He said they picked up the women in Hayti, Mo., and Ashland.

Motorist Fined

LISBON, Dec. 10.—Edward Custer of East Liverpool was fined $100 and costs Friday by Mayor G. Cecil Rauch after Custer had entered a plea of guilty to a charge of driving while intoxicated. The mayor also suspended Custer's driving license for six months.

State Was Made for Man,

(By Associated Press)

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—Anthony Eden, trim former foreign secretary of Great Britain, spoke out emphatically last night for the preservation of the democracy which "we in England and you in America cherish most," and saw as the greatest threat to that democracy "a new form of idolatry, the worship of the state."

Eden's address to the National Association of Manufacturers was a ringing defense of democracy as "a university in which we learn from one another. It can never be a barracks where blind obedience is the first essential."

"It would indeed be the greatest irony in human history," he told the 4000 persons at the banquet and a nation-wide radio audience, "if mankind were to allow all progress to be stifled by the setting up of this 'worship of the state' to which all men must bow down, and to which they must sacrifice their freedom of faith, of speech, of worship."

State Made For Man
"Man was not, in our view, made for the state. The state was made for man," he said.

The British statesman, who resigned his cabinet post in a difference of opinion with Prime Minister Chamberlain over policies toward dictators, stressed that Great Britain and the United States must stand firm together against the enemies of democracy and "we are acutely conscious of the need to defend ourselves."

A spectacular race against time and weather preceded Eden's arrival in New York. The liner Aquitania, which Eden and his party boarded a week ago, was delayed by fog and storms at sea. A special cutter carried Eden to the Battery, from where a police escort rushed him to the Waldorf Astoria hotel.

Describing himself as "an average Englishman here only on a friendly visit and in no wise official," Eden said "we must be constantly re-examining our political faith and applying it to the conditions of the modern world."

Matter of Faith
"Every political system, be it democratic or autocratic, must continually evolve, and in the last resource the survival of democracy must depend upon the faith which it inspires, and the results which, through faith, it can achieve."

"Democracy must have the strength of the best tempered steel, not rigid, but supple," he added. "It must have the strength of the Turn to IDOLATRY, Page 8

THE MAJORITY GETS ITS RIGHTS

Add to the things that can and do happen in America the Sidewalk Superintendents' club, said to be founded by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., or at least with his connivance, for people who like to watch steamshovels.

That means, of course, everybody. Curiosity is universal. Where there's a hole in the ground with smoke and sound issuing from it, there will be found the world, stretching its neck to look inside.

The customary way of dealing with curious on-lookers is to shoot them away and to bar them from a good look by putting up a tight fence. When it came time to put up another building in Rockefeller Center in New York City, this procedure was revised. A covered platform with railings was built for the convenience of kibitzers. It's the city's biggest free attraction.

The ice has been broken. The rights of the curious have been recognized. It's going to go mighty hard with contractors from now on who don't get into the spirit of the times and at least furnish the public with knotholes in the fences around excavating projects.

"UNION JACK"

John N. Garner, it seems, was too busy hunting deer to take part in the Red River county meeting which started a presidential boom in his behalf. He was too busy eating venison afterward to make any comment.

It's a safe bet, moreover, that he will keep on being too busy. He would be less than human if he weren't flattered by the nice things his Texas friends say about him, but Mr. Garner above all else is a professional party man.

He understands perfectly what this boom means, and what comments like Sen. Guffey's appeal to President Roosevelt to seek a third term mean. A fight over the renomination of Mr. Roosevelt is being brewed. The struggle for party control in 1940 is getting hot.

There will be shouts of rage and squeals of joy as this combatant and that one gets knifed in the back or closes in on an unprotected windpipe. But Mr. Garner, whose sole aim in life is to hold the Democratic party together, will be trying to keep out of it.

A couple of years ago there wouldn't have been anything unusual about this. Today, a Democratic leader whose loyalty to the party is unquestioned, as against his loyalty to a faction within the party, is a rarity. "Union Jack" Garner is such a leader.

FAREWELL, NEUTRALITY

Diplomatic conferences, together with certainty of some kind of a hemispheric defense program, indicate a radical revision of foreign policy.

Perhaps now is the time to reminisce briefly about a dream this country had a few years ago—a dream of being able to keep out of trouble by refusing to become enmeshed in it.

The consequence of having the dream was an attempt, admittedly futile, to legislate a permanent condition of neutrality for the United States. Roughly, the idea was to keep the country out of future wars by forbidding it to grind the ax of either combatant with war supplies. The President of the United States was given power to place embargoes on such supplies and to prohibit American vessels from engaging in commerce in dangerous areas. This was to be neutrality.

The law collapsed without much delay. Americans have not felt neutral; they have not been encouraged to feel neutral by their leaders; the leaders, both elected and appointed, have not felt neutral. For better or worse, the vision of neutrality by law is on the verge of being abandoned in favor of a revised foreign policy which it's safe to say will be more, not less, aggressive.

DJIBOUTI COMES BACK

Italian Fascists are asking for Tunisia and Corsica, but probably don't expect to get them—not yet. What they're after, more likely, is a spot on the map called Djibouti and a share in the control of the Suez canal.

Djibouti will have a vaguely familiar sound, because it appeared often in the news a few years ago when Italian troops were carrying civilization to Ethiopia. It is the port of entry for Ethiopia, a sun-baked town in French Somaliland on the Red sea. Italy wants it and probably is capable of creating enough furor over Tunisia and Corsica to get it. Later, it may get them too, but considerable imagination is required to believe the time is propitious for a land grab of such magnitude.

Djibouti, as a matter of fact, would represent a good-sized grab itself. Under Italian control and heavily fortified, it would pinch off the British lifeline to the far east at one of the three places where such a thing is possible. The other two are the Suez canal at the northern end of the Red sea, and the Straits of Gibraltar.

In other words, Premier Mussolini seems about to tie one more knot in the British lion's tail, with the involuntary cooperation of France, which will find it easier to give up Djibouti than to fight over Tunisia and Corsica.

THE STARS SAY:

For Sunday, December 11

SUNDAY'S horoscope holds excellent promise for all affairs of the church, the clergy and all old-established matters. But sudden events also obtrude, upsetting plans and causing irritations and disturbances in both private and business affairs. There are signs of a sudden estrangement.

Those whose birthday it is are confronted by a year of excellent opportunities for promotion, advancement, honors and the aid of those in high places. But with this there is an omen of irritating and unwelcome upheavals, which may react on the private emotions as well as in business dealings.

A child born on this day may have an adventurous, ambitious and dramatic nature, clamoring for thrills and stirring exploits. But a jealous and possibly eccentric nature may bring defeat to a promising public career. Similar proclivities disturb its romantic experiences.

For Monday, December 12

MONDAY'S astrological forecast holds promise of much activity and possible excitement or agitation. This relates to the launching of important projects in which there is hope of support from those in prestige and authority. While such enterprises may gain by strenuous methods and bold strokes, a degree of "policy" or finesse would likewise assist.

Those whose birthday it is are on the threshold of a very lively and progressive year. Those in power seem disposed to offer substantial aid in launching important projects, either of a speculative nature or those that are practical and constructive.

A child born on this day may be particularly talented and brilliant, with strong inclinations to exploit his talents in a showy or bragging manner. However, it may have a bold and forceful character, with many social and humane graces and inclinations, which may be exercised with finesse and charm.

TRAFFIC TOLL REDUCED

Intensive, methodical safety campaigns have slashed sharply into the nation's traffic death toll this year.

A survey of 35 leading cities—all but one of them among the top 40 in population—showed today this situation for the first week of December:

Ten cut their death toll by 40 per cent or more, compared with the corresponding period of 1937; At least 10 of the other 25 reduced their traffic mortality rate 15 to 35 per cent, with many others showing improvements; and

Only five apparently headed for an increased fatality list.

The nation's population centers have accepted with the "three E's"—enforcement, education and engineering—the challenge of the reckless driver, the jay-walking pedestrian.

The 69 per cent slash for Providence, R. I., where there were no fatalities for an 111-day stretch, placed it in the select list. Speeds there were reduced to 25 miles an hour throughout the city and enforced without exception. Twelve persons have been killed to date this year, compared with 39 for the corresponding 1937 period.

Columbus, O., among the leaders with 58.3 per cent less deaths than the like period last year, takes offenders to court immediately.

Other leaders, and their approximate percentage decreases in traffic deaths, included:

Cleveland, 48.2; Birmingham, Ala., 48.1; Louisville, Ky., 47.2; Detroit, 45; Dallas, 41; Milwaukee and Buffalo, 40. Newark, N. J., where, as in New York City, figures were available only for the first 10 months, showed a 60 per cent slash.

Physicians Deal With Pain But Don't Know What It Is

BY LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

IF YOU lay your hand on some kind of an object, you can report that it is hard, sharp and hot. All these sensations are the result of nerve endings in the skin which carry impulses to the sensory area of the brain. They all seem to be mixed up together—that is, you feel hardness, sharpness and heat all at the same time, but they can be dissociated because heat and cold spots are entirely separate from pain feeling.

These heat and cold spots can be mapped out. On the back of the hand, for instance, a fine hot needle point may not be felt at all on one area of the skin but within a very short distance will be felt distinctly.

Physician's Case

A physician in one of our prominent medical schools has described his own case. He has a cervical rib, an extra rib in the neck, which presses on the plexus of nerves which are distributed through his arms. As a result of this, there is a region in the arm lacking in the pressure and temperature senses pertaining to a sense of pain. Other cases have been described in which the pressure sense alone remains, dissociating the pain and temperature senses.

There is another difference between the ordinary nerves of sensation, which is that there is superficial and deep sensibility. In other words, if all the nerves to a given area of skin are cut, the individuals will still be able to feel pressure and movements due to nerves that are deeper than those in the skin. So far as superficial sensation is concerned, the most sensitive part of the body is the tip of the tongue. This, of course, accounts for the feelings that occur when one has a sharp tooth or a grain of raspberry seed inside the mouth. They feel out of all proportion to their size, sharpness or hardness.

Next comes the tip of the forefinger, then the palm, then the bottom of the feet. Least sensitive is the skin along the spine and in the middle of the neck or back.

The pain sense is the most mysterious of all. One of the most astonishing things is that physicians constantly are dealing with pain and yet haven't the slightest idea as to exactly what it is. They know a good deal but they don't know its nature. For instance, pain in the intestines is a daily experience in every doctor's life. Yet, it is possible for a surgeon to handle and cut the intestines of a patient who is not anesthetized without causing any pain whatever. The theory is that intestinal pain is due to cramps or peristaltic movements which are excessive, but that still remains purely theory.

Questions and Answers

E. M.: There are several preparations of wheat germ on the market. Is this advisable to take over any length of time? Isn't the calcium as found in milk and cracked wheat bread better? What, if any, harm can come of adding the wheat germ to the daily menu?

Answer: Wheat germ concentrates contain vitamin B and are useful in cases of vitamin B deficiency. They have nothing to do with calcium replacement. They are recommended in paralysis and neuritis due to starvation and monotonous diet, alcoholic neuritis, gout, anemia and general rundown condition in middle age. I know of no report which indicates that the prolonged use does harm.

The Bible society is rapidly realizing its great ideal, to be able to offer the Scriptures to every man in his own tongue at a price within reach of his capacity to pay. Thousands of churches will observe Universal Bible Sunday.

The Bible will be recognized with special emphasis at the Baptist church with the sermon, "In Communication With God." This observance Sunday evening will be marked by a Bible quiz contest between the men and the women of the congregation. Following the evening service the men will all be seated on the side of the church and the women on the other side. The ladies will have the first question and everyone in their group will have an opportunity to answer it. This new procedure will be followed throughout the quiz. Questions will be presented to the group instead of to individuals. Mrs. S. T. Maginn will be the score keeper and the quiz will run for thirty minutes.

Services for the church and announcements follow:

Sunday school, 9:45; Luke, 12:14-21; Charles W. Youtz, superintendent.

Coveting is forbidden by Divine command in the ninth and tenth commandments. To covet is to lust after what is another's and sinfully desire to obtain it, willing to deprive him of it by unjust means.

It is wrong to desire what another has, but it is even worse to desire it at his expense and loss. Coveting destroys contentment. Covetousness has been the hideous mother of a hideous brood of sins: lying, stealing, perjury, bribery, even murder.

It is proper to covet or desire the good things of life, when they are not obtained at the expense of another.

Morning worship, 11; sermon.

This Sunday is designated by the American Bible society as Universal Bible Sunday. This year marks the progress of placing the Holy Scriptures or parts of it, in one thousand and eight different languages.

The original languages were Hebrew and Greek. The first translation was Latin. The thousandth language was for a tribe of natives in the Belgian Congo in Africa. The Holy Bible is the book of authority in faith and practice for the Christian church. It is the Word of God. Its writers were inspired by the Holy Spirit and thus it and its message is a "light unto our feet and lamp unto our path."

Are We Beasts?

This is the question a prominent columnist asks in a service club magazine. He says, "The Four Horsemen ride again: Famine, Death, Pestilence and War are again in the saddle. Hell is again being brought to earth. The flower of nations is again to be cannon fodder. Poison gas is again to rot the lungs of our young men. Shrapnel and machine gun bullets are again to rip their flesh and send them shrieking into eternity."

A score of years has passed since the last insane world-wide conflict. You recall that war was to end war—to make the world safe for democracy. It seems the horrors of 20 years ago have not taught the world much. This, however, the present day teach with respect also to the past—that with passions uncontrolled and his natural selfish tendencies unchecked, man drops to the level of beast. He has proven himself unable to lift himself out of the rut.

The coming of the Prince of Peace has significance. His work and purpose is to elevate man. To the degree that he controls and rules our hearts does man rise above himself.

Christian Science Society Services

"God, the Preserver of Man," is the subject of the lesson-sermon which will be read at the morning worship service of the Christian Science society tomorrow. The Sunday service is also broadcast over station WCLE (610 kil.), Cleveland, every Sunday at 11 a. m.

Among the citations which comprise the lesson-sermon is the following from the Bible: "For the Lord giveth wisdom: out of His mouth cometh knowledge and understanding. He keepeth the paths of judgment, and preserveth the way of his saints." (Proverbs 2:6-8.)

The lesson-sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "God is the Life, or intelligence, which forms and preserves the individuality and identity of animals as well as of men. The true sense of being and its eternal perfection should appear now, even as it will hereafter." (p. 550.)

"Often a Bridesmaid"

BY HAZEL LIVINGSTON

CHAPTER XIX

One boy left, and then the other two. Lane sat on in the darkness with Natalie. She was a nice child, he always enjoyed her, in spite of her sharp tongue.

"And so you're sitting, waiting for Margaret, as usual," she said.

"Yep. One of the Raleigh twins swallowed a safety pin or something, and they sent for her. I wish everyone wouldn't impose on her."

"So do I. But we all do. I hate myself for it, but I do. We're selfish to the core, the whole kit and kaboodle of us."

"You're entertaining, anyway," he smiled.

She smiled too. "I know. But so's Margaret. That's the funny part. Looks and everything. Sometimes I almost hate her, she's so perfect!"

"O. I wouldn't say that!"

"I would! But I don't really hold it against her. She's a grand gal. Make you a swell wife. By the way, how's it coming? Going to talk her into it?"

He hesitated. Lit a cigaret. She took it away from him and made him light another for himself. "O, well—let's forget our troubles for a couple of minutes. Tell me about the boat. Are you really going to buy a boat and sail to the South seas?"

"Well, I—"

She put her hand on his. "Honey—don't let anybody—not even Margaret—cheat you of what you want. Go! If you have to go alone!"

Margaret said, "Of course I don't care, Nat. Why should I?"

"Well, he was yours. I practically took him away from you. At least it would seem that way. I hope you won't think I did."

"Don't be silly. If Lane Penny were mine, you couldn't take him away—"

Couldn't. . . But Sue had taken Kenneth. . . And of course, Nat had taken Lane. . . Nat had cared of course. She hadn't wanted him, she wasn't jealous. Except that it hurt, just a little when someone who has begged you to marry him, well, not in words, but in every other way, for two years, suddenly turns around and gets engaged to your sister!

For the first time, Margaret really saw Natalie as an individual. Not her pet little sister, who was generous with chocolates and stinky with bath salts and perfume her little sister who had borrowed her silk stockings and beaux and handkerchiefs for years. But Natalie Wickham, a small, blonde woman, with devastating ways and a wide, laughing mouth in which there was no gentleness.

She saw what she'd never dreamed before, that Nat wanted Lane Penny, that she ached with love for him, as she once upon a time had ached with love for someone who didn't love her enough. She saw that Natalie was seething with excitement under her pose of sophisticated boredom.

"Lane was mad for a boat, you know, but I talked him out of it and into a trailer. I'd rather go to Tacs, and it was his original idea, anyway?—remember?"

"Yes, I remember," Margaret said.

"Oh, you don't. You never half-listened to what Lane said. You were always thinking about something else. Sue and her babies. Maggie, promise you won't be angry if I say something?"

"Of course, not! If I got angry at all my imperfections—"

"I know, but usually you don't listen. That's it. I'm scared about you, sometimes. I know you didn't care about Lane and, of course, he really didn't care deeply about you, or he wouldn't have turned to me—but you OUGHT to care about somebody. My goodness, you can't trail around with Kenny and Sue all your life!"

"There's still Joe, and a few others, thank you!"

But her mouth twitched. For a moment she wondered. . . She had thought there was Lane, too. For a moment she saw herself as Natalie was seeing her, and she saw Joe, as he must seem to others. Handsome, tall, bronzed, a blond giant, with a rising reputation in engineering circles. A catch! The man the Deckers would have liked to have for a son-in-law. The man her father and Aunt Bet, and every one who cared about her future would like to see her married to.

And he hadn't been very lovely lately. He'd been gay and he'd been serious and he'd been full of his work, and full of his plans for the future. But he hadn't implied, as he used to imply . . .

Well, what if he hadn't! They'd been too busy running around having a good time. And she'd been too busy. And it was nothing to how busy she was going to be now, until Natalie was married.

After the first awkwardness of explaining that she was being a bridesmaid again—not the bride—Margaret took the entire business happily in charge.

There was Daddy to placate, and Aunt Bet. While Lane Penny was Lane Penny, junior partner with Jenny & Hollister, he was an eligible bridegroom. But a young man, who withdraws from a profitable and promising post and admits that he hasn't any very clear idea of making a living while geyssing about the country, is something else again.

Even Aunt Bet's hope that his uncle might do the right thing by the young folks, was dashed when Lane admitted blithely that though Uncle Tim had taken him into the firm, he had no idea of making him his heir.

"Whatave, Uncle Tim leaves will go to his two sisters and his daughter, Audrey!"

"But your inheritance from your mother?" Aunt Bet began, delicately.

"Oh, that?" Lane said, and grinned.

"Tell 'em you squandered it in riotous living," Natalie prompted.

Well, the truth is by the time father's estate was settled, mother didn't have anything like the fortune she was supposed to have had. And then she died when I was if you know, and though Uncle Tim boosted it some by his handling I came into it, principal and all when I was 21, end—well, I've done a lot of spending these last years as Nat says—"

Nat's eyes rested, just for a moment on Margaret. Amazingly Margaret thought. . . But before she could react, it was before she could cry, even inwardly. "But I never took anything from him, really. What he spent on me, he'd have spent on himself or any girl!" Natalie had turned to Lane again.

"What does it matter?" she said. "We're going to LIVE!"

Aunt Bet tried, ineffectually, to make Natalie listen to her familiar argument about "material things," counting more than you think, now, dear." Alex Wickham brought up, unfortunately, the case-history of Sue and Kenneth, who had married on nothing and, in spite of her parents' generosity, weren't getting along too well.

Margaret winced, and Babs said, "Oh, well, Sue's a fool and Kenny never did have any brains. If he should have stuck to football, I'll be different with Nat and Lane."

"I should hope so!" Natalie agreed, comfortably.

"And by the way," Babs went on, "I heard it on terribly good authority, but it's a heavy secret and I'm not supposed to tell that Ken is trying to get back to football. He's applied for a coaching job—coaching football up in the northern part of the state somewhere—some high school. He'll have to teach sewing or china painting or something besides, though. They always do in those little schools."

"I hadn't heard—" Margaret began.

"Oh, it's a secret!" Babs repeated.

It was really more than I can afford and I hate to run bills at the shop."

"Well, I might try it on," Natalie said, "just to get an idea."

So they bought it, and shoes and hat and gloves and bag to match.

BY HAZEL LIVINGSTON

CHAPTER XIX

Cne boy left, and then the other two. Lane sat on in the darkness with Natalie. She was a nice child he always enjoyed her, in spite of her sharp tongue.

"And so you're sitting, waiting for Margaret, as usual," she said.

"Yep. One of the Raleigh twins swallowed a safety pin or something, and they sent for her. I wish everyone wouldn't impose on her."

"So do I. But we all do. I hate myself for it, but I do. We're selfish to the core, the whole kit and kaboodle of us."

"You're entertaining, anyway," he smiled.

She smiled too. "I know. But so's Margaret. That's the funny part. Looks and everything. Sometimes I almost hate her, she's so perfect!"

"O. I wouldn't say that!"

"I would! But I don't really hold it against her. She's a grand gal. Make you a swell wife. By the way, how's it coming? Going to talk her into it?"

He hesitated. Let a cigarette. She took it away from him and made him light another for himself. "Oh well—let's forget our troubles for a couple of minutes. Tell me about the boat. Are you really going to buy a boat and sail to the South seas?"

"Well, I—"

She put her hand on his. "Honey—don't let anybody—not even Margaret—cheat you of what you want. Go! If you have to go alone!"

Margaret said, "Of course I don't care, Nat darling. Why should I?"

"Well, he was yours. I practically took him away from you. At least it would seem that way. I hope you won't think I did."

"Don't be silly. If Lane Penney were mine, you couldn't take him away."

Couldn't. . . But Sue had taken Kenneth. . . And of course, Nat had taken Lane, not that she cared of course. She hadn't wanted him, she wasn't jealous. Except that it hurt, just a little when someone who has begged you to marry him, well, not in words, but in every other way, for two years, suddenly turns around and gets engaged to your sister!

For the first time, Margaret really saw Natalie as an individual. Not her pet little sister, who was generous with chocolates and stung with bath salts and perfume her little sister who had borrowed her silk stockings and beaux and handkerchiefs for years. But Natalie Wickham, a small, blonde woman, with devastating ways and a wide, laughing mouth in which there was no gentleness.

She saw what she'd never dreamed before, that Nat wanted Lane Penney, that she ached with love for him, as she once upon a time had ached with love for someone who didn't love her enough. She saw that Natalie was aching with excitement, under her pose of sophisticated boredom.

"Lane was mad for a boat, you know, but I talked him out of it and into a trailer. I'd rather go to Tacs, and it was his original idea, anyway?—remember?"

"Yes, I remember," Margaret said.

"Oh, you don't. You never half listened to what Lane said. You were always thinking about something else. Sue and her babies."

Maggie, promise you won't be angry if I say something?"

"Of course not! If I got angry at all your impertinence—"

"I know, but usually you don't listen. That's it. I'm scared about you, sometimes. I know you didn't care about Lane and, of course, he really didn't care deeply about you, or he wouldn't have turned to me—but you OUGHT to care about somebody. My goodness, you can't trail around with Kenny and Sue all your life!"

"There's still Joe, and a few others, thank you!"

But her mouth twitched. For a moment she wondered. . . She had thought there was Lane, too. For a moment she saw herself as Natalie was seeing her, and she saw Joe, as he must seem to others. Handsome, tall, bronzed, a blond giant, with a rising reputation in engineering circles. A catch! The man the Deckers would have liked to have for a son-in-law. The man her father and Aunt Bet, and every one who cared about her future would like to see her married to.

And he hadn't been very lovely lately. He'd been gay and he'd been serious and he'd been full of his work, and full of his plans for the future. But he hadn't implied, as he used to imply. . .

"Well, what if he hadn't! They'd been too busy running around having a good time. And she'd been too busy. And it was nothing to how busy she was going to be now, until Natalie was married."

After the first awkwardness of explaining that she was being a bridesmaid again—not the bride—Margaret took the entire business happily in charge.

There was Daddy to placate, and Aunt Bet. While Lane Penney was Lane Penney, junior partner with Jenney & Hollister, he was an eligible bridegroom. But a young man, who withdraws from a profitable and promising post and admits that he hasn't any very clear idea of making a living while geyssing about the country, is something else again.

Even Aunt Bet's hope that his uncle might do the right thing by the young ficks, was dashed when Lane admitted blithely that though Uncle Tim had taken him into the firm, he had no idea of making him his heir. "Whatever Uncle Tim leaves will go to his two sisters and his daughter, Audrey."

"But your inheritance from your mother?" Aunt Bet began, delicately.

"Oh, that?" Lane said, and grinned.

"Tell 'em you squandered it in riotous living," Natalie prompted.

"Well, the truth is, by the time father's estate was settled, mother didn't have anything like the fortune she was supposed to have had. And then she died when I was 15, you know, and though Uncle Tim boosted it some by his handling, I came into it, principal and all when I was 21, and—well, I've done a lot of spending these last years as Nat says—"

Nat's eyes rested, just for a moment on Margaret. Acquisitively Margaret thought, But before she could resent it, before she could cry, even inwardly, "But I never took anything from him, really. What he spent on me, he'd have spent on himself or any girl!" Natalie had turned to Lane again.

"What does it matter?" she said.

"We're going to LIVE!"

Aunt Bet tried, ineffectually, to make Natalie listen to her familiar argument about "material things" counting more than you think now, dear. "Alex Wickham brought up, unfortunately, the case history of Sue and Kenneth, who had married on nothing and, in spite of her parents' generosity, weren't getting along too well."

Margaret winced, and Babs said, "Oh, well, Sue's a fool and Kenny never did have any brains. He should have stuck to football. It'll be different with Nat and Lane."

"I should hope so!" Natalie agreed, comfortably.

"And, by the way," Babs went on, "I heard it on terribly good authority, but it's a heavy secret, and I'm not supposed to tell that Ken is trying to get back to football. He's applied for a coaching job—coaching football up in the northern part of the state some-where—some high school. He'll have to teach sewing or china painting or something besides, though. They always do in those little schools."

"I hadn't heard—" Margaret began.

"Oh, it's a secret!" Babs repeated, cheerfully. "And he probably won't get it, anyway. He'd have to go back to summer session, or he might have to go back to school for another year to get his teaching credits. And he couldn't do that unless papa Decker paid the bills, and he probably won't."

"I don't believe it. Sounds like a lot of campus gossip to me," Margaret said, stoutly.

And as she thought of Ken, worrying, not telling her, and of Sue who would be no help in the crisis, she suddenly realized something else. That her baby sister, Natalie, was also grown up. That she, too, was an individual, a man grown. That soon she would be marrying.

If I don't hurry, I'll be the old maid in the family, she thought, worriedly. And then she lifted her head, and looked straight into the mirror above the living room fireplace.

She saw herself, and her sister and in the background, Aunt Bet and her father. She saw Babs, the chubby little face, with the straw-colored hair growing out of a fuzzy pompadour. She saw Natalie, muddly-blond sausage-like curls above a face that was plump but would never be pretty. And she saw her own shining gold waves above her wide, white forehead, delicate, perfect features.

Involuntarily, she smiled. She wasn't vain. She just saw, in the old mirror's faintly greenish depths what she'd always heard, that was, and would always be, beauty of the family.

It was tacitly understood, Natalie's wedding would be a question. It didn't occur to any of the Wickhams that she would want a big wedding. Wasn't she marrying a boy who would be practically penniless? Weren't they going to in a trailer, to a sort of artists' oasis in the desert in New Mexico?

But Natalie surprised them all by the extravagance of her ideas. "It's our stepping off into the simple life," she argued, "and if we don't make a loud noise over the step people will think we just fell."

Margaret thought of Sue's wedding and Sue's trousseau, her white satin dressing table, and her hand-woven going away gown cut up into coats for the twins. But at least the Deckers could afford it, and the Wickhams couldn't. Nat would be largely up to her. Nat never saved a nickel, and, of course, Daddy couldn't do much. Still, it was the first wedding in the family, and the more they talked about it, the larger it became.

"No fuss," Alex Wickham said, "but a church wedding, of course."

"Naturally I don't want a circus wedding, with white satin and all that," Natalie said, "but there's no civilized law against making oneself as easy to be upon as possible. Something very simple, but nice. A going-away effect. Something I can use for traveling, too."

Elsons had just the thing—a French blue dressmaker suit with a deep blue blouse and a deep blue topcoat to go with it.

Conscientiously Margaret mentioned it, and the price.

"But we CAN'T pay that much!" Nat said.

"It is really more than I can afford and I hate to run bills at the shop."

"Well, I might try it on," Natalie said, "just to get an idea."

So they bought it, and shoes and hat and gloves and bag to match. (To Be Continued) highest form of discipline—self discipline. Eden's remarks were repeatedly interrupted by applause as he lightened his defense of democracy with quips on the American revolution and English traditions.

"We in Britain know full well that we are no paragons," he said laughingly. "If we happen to forget it a moment someone will be sure to remind us of it. We acknowledge of course that there are many chequered pages in our long history. One of the worst concerns our dealings with you 160 years ago."

Period of Emergency
In another vein, Eden said "we know we are destined, in our land and in our time and in our generation, to live in a period of emergency of which none can see the end."

"If throughout the testing time," he added, "howsoever long or short it may be, we hold fast to our faith, cradle it in stone, and set steel to defend it, we can yet hand on to the generations that are to come."

Eden emphasized that "a false complacency is the worst calamity that can befall any nation in critical times."

Eden's speech closed the manufacturers' 43rd annual convention. Charles R. Hook, head of the American Rolling Mill company and retiring president of the association, introduced Eden as "one of the most colorful figures in the world statesmanship," a man who had "written his own introduction across the pages of contemporary history."

Theatre Attractions

Pat O'Brien, Ann Sheridan and James Cagney in a scene from "Angels With Dirty Faces," showing at the State theater Sunday through Tuesday.

Two popular Irish lads are teamed in "Angels With Dirty Faces," which will be the featured attraction at the State theater three days next week, starting Sunday.

With Pat O'Brien and Jimmy Cagney in the film are Ann Sheridan, Humphrey Bogart, George Bancroft and the "Dead End" kids.

Different Paths
An intensely powerful story of two boys brought up together in the slums, whose lives become widely divergent when one is sent to reform school for a prank in which both took part. He becomes a big-time gangster, his friend enters the priesthood. Their paths cross again when the gangster, part of the mob that runs the city, backs the priest, who is heading a "clean-up" campaign, his object being to save the thousands of slum boys in his parish from lives of crime. The strong bond between the two men makes their conflict doubly exciting, and leads to the unique and thrilling climax which lifts the picture high above the rank and file of gangster stories.

Advance preview critics have heaped praises upon the acting of the two stars, and upon the antics of that famous sextette of toughies, the "Dead End" kids. Ann Sheridan is said to handle her first strong dramatic role with remarkable ability, and Bogart and Bancroft are hailed as the most menacing of menaces.

"Girls' School"
Wednesday, at the State, is "Girls' School," featuring Ann Shirley, Nan Grey and Ralph Bellamy. The story concerns an exclusive girls' finishing school, attended by Nan Grey, spoiled daughter of a wealthy family, and Ann Shirley, who is there by virtue of a scholarship.

Freddie March and Virginia Bruce have the leads in "There Goes My Heart," which shows Thursday and Friday at the State.

In the comedy are Patsy Kelly, Alan Mowbray, Eugene Pallette, Nancy Carroll, Ed Sullivan and several other well-known players.

Concluding the week, showing Saturday only, is a new comedy, "Up the River," with Preston Foster, Tony Martin, Phyllis Brooks, Slim Summerville, Arthur Treacher, Alan Dinehart, Bill Robinson, Eddie Collins, Jane Darwell and Sidney Toler.

The last performances of the delightful "The Great Waltz," a dramatization of the life of the "waltz king," Johann Strauss, will be seen tonight at the State. Fernand Gravet has the role of the composer, Louise Rainer, his wife, and Miliza Korjus, his sweetheart.

New Policy at Grand
The Grand begins a new policy of operation on Sunday. The theater will be open on Sundays, Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays, and holidays, instead of every night in the week, according to the present plan.

Sunday the Grand will present two pictures: "Swing That Cheer" with Tom Brown, Andy Devine, Robert Wilcox, Margaret Early and Constance Moore in the leading roles in a story of fast football action and campus romance; and "His Exciting Night," starring Charlie Ruggles, with Maxie Rosenbloom and Marion Martin in supporting roles.

Wednesday's double bill at the Grand is: "Torchy Gets Her Man," with Glenda Farrell and Barton MacLane in their familiar roles of the girl reporter-sleuth and her policeman boy friend; and "Sharp-shooter," which gives featured parts to Brian Donley, Lynn Bari and Wally Vernon.

Western For Weekend
Gene Autry and Smiley Burnette in "Rhythm of the Saddle," return to the Grand next Friday and Saturday, at which time a new western-action serial opens there. The serial features, in 15 chapters, is "The Lone Ranger," based on the radio serial of the same name. Lynn Roberts, Sammy McKim, William Farnum, Chief Thunder-Cloud and others have the leading roles. The story takes place in the west, immediately following the Civil war, and dramatizes the efforts of a man and his friend to save the state from its ruthless gang rulers.

Concluding tonight at the Grand are "West of the Santa Fe," featuring Charles Starrett, and the serial, "Flash Gordon on Mars."

Steel Cars Credited With Saving Lives of 100 Or More

Women were screaming and passengers were jammed between the seats as the lights went out and the coaches rolled over.

"Lots of men and women were in their night clothes," Shaw said. Fires were built along the railroad right of way to warm the shivering passengers before they could be taken to nearby towns. Trackage was torn up for hundreds of feet and other Baltimore & Ohio trains were re-routed.

Roy McKinley of Garrett, Ind., was the conductor, and Wilkey Hughes of Willard, O., the flagman on the train.

Ten Coaches Derailed
R. M. Shaw, who drove the ambulance to the wreck reported eight of the train's ten coaches were derailed. Some of these he said, plunged deep into mud at the base of embankments.

"The steel cars sank almost five feet in the mud and many passengers were helped out through windows," Shaw said.

Nearly all passengers were taken to Desher, about 25 miles east of here, and there boarded another east-bound train, Shaw said.

At Akron, Division Superintendent V. C. Baker said the cause of the derailment had not been determined. A spokesman said main line traffic was being re-routed.
